

Annual RCIE Conference

China and Globalization:

Economic Integration and Protectionism

Beijing, China, June 22-23, 2009

This is the first annual conference of the Research Center for International Economics (RCIE), University of International Business and Economics.

Economists are invited to submit papers related to the theme for presentation consideration. Both theoretical and empirical papers are most welcome. Papers in the following areas are preferred (but not limited to):

- foreign trade and foreign direct investment (especially related to China);
- exchange rates and currencies (especially renminbi);
- economic integration, including regionalism and multilateralism;
- China's foreign economic policies;
- China's exchange rate, monetary, and fiscal policies and related impacts;
- Trade conflicts, disputes, and issues between China and other economies;
- WTO and China;
- Protectionism and financial crisis;

Please send the draft of a paper or an extended abstract to YIN Xiaopeng <xyin_ca@yahoo.com>. The deadline for receiving submission is March 31, 2009. We prefer to receive one submission by one person, unless different papers will be presented by different co-authors.

Please include in your submission your name, e-mail address(es), affiliation, and mailing address. For joint papers, please include the relevant information of ALL co-authors.

Please visit the homepage of the center for more information about this conference:
